Extract from a Letter to Winthrop. Upon Lexicons. The price of a work of this kind, depends upon its author, age, & edition. We might suppose the more modern the better, but the plans of rendering such works more simple, have not been favorable to Oriental Literature. The History of such works especially the modern part I am not fully acquainted with, but from what I have seen, both antient & modern, I am prejudiced against Pentaglott's, Heptaglots, & Polyglots. Schindler expresses the whole Pentaglot in the Chaldee characters, a strange presumption when all the Alphabets have not the same number of letters, & deserves in the execution much about the same respect as your publishers of Circles of sciences in which everything is promised & nothing distinctly known. [296] The great success of Grævius, Grenovius, in Latin, Stevens, & Portryal in Greek, Buxtorf in Hebrew, Pocock Arabic, & Kennicott in the late Collations confirms the opinion that concentred force is the greatest & discourages me from looking into Authors who treat of everything.
